

Please do not weaken consumer protection by weakening the NO CALL list. People are working harder than ever these days, and when they finally can rest in their own homes, they do not want their peace disturbed by telemarketers. When the NO CALL LIST was first created, there was a big buzz about it because people were happy that we finally could do something about all the unwanted, unsolicited phone calls. Even paying extra for an unlisted phone number did nothing to stop the calls. Once the LIST became law, we finally were able to have some peace in our own homes. Please do not take that away from us. If we want to refinance our homes, or take a vacation, trust me, we'll call about it. But we do not want people calling us, interrupting the little time we have to spend quietly in our homes with our families. (It's bad enough we have piles of junk mail to weed through everyday!)

You should be able to glean from the consumer reaction to the NO CALL LIST that it is something we want and need. Now, why would you want to take that away from us??
